Gladiators had it rough – to say the least.

Their cells barely were big enough to allow them to turn around in for the time allotted them until death; usually four or five battles in the arena.

In what has been described as an archaeological sensation, a model of a Roman gladiator school was found in Carnuntum, Austria, and was presented by the Ludwig Boltzmann institute for archaeology in Carnuntum, Austria, on Monday.

The ruins were found at the point where a Roman city flourished 1700 years ago, being a major military center, as...
